The section also notes grudgingly that "as required by New York City, Hudson Yards will build 460 low-income units, distributed by city lottery." Mansion is always pretty to look at, with its attractive color renderings of joyless Brutalist towers and drafty-ass McMansions (with sweeping views!). But for all its manicured style and tongue-in-cheek class cues, there's one thing the section can't make look good: The ocean of wasted resources poured into the purposeless layers of ...
